Welcome to the Acute GP Team at the BRI

Your GP has referred you to the Acute GP Team at the Bristol Royal Infirmary (BRI) for further investigation to help understand the nature of your medical problem.

In most cases, the best place for you to get better is at home, supported by family, friends or a variety of community services available. Our aim, where possible, is to investigate, diagnose and treat your condition without having to keep you in hospital overnight. In a situation where you need closer monitoring or specialist medical support we can admit you straight into the most appropriate service here at the BRI.

What to do on arrival

Please inform the receptionist on A413 that you are due to be seen by the Acute GP Team when you arrive. A nurse will normally see you within 15 minutes of arrival. You will then be seen by a doctor who will further assess your condition.

The clinician will conduct an examination and discuss your condition with you. The doctor may perform some tests such as an X-ray or blood tests. If you would like a chaperone to accompany you ask any member of our team (see our chaperone leaflet at reception for more information). Some tests such as blood tests and scans can sometimes take several hours to get full results, so please be prepared to wait for these. Our reception team can guide you to the nearest place to get refreshments. The doctor will then decide whether you can be treated at home or if you need to be admitted to hospital. If required, you may also be seen by a hospital specialist.

The AGPT doctor will then discuss a care plan with you and with your own GP and decide if your condition can be safely managed at home. This may include getting additional support at home or some new medications.

If the AGPT doctor decides that you do need to be admitted, they will speak to the hospital team to organise this for you.
